

Peace in Colombia is Possible:

Urge President Obama to create a new Colombia policy that protects victims of violence

Colombia is home to the Western Hemisphere's largest humanitarian crisis.

Close to four million people have been forced from their homes and are internally displaced or seeking refuge across neighboring borders.

It's time for change.

Indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities in Colombia have been disproportionately affected by continuing violence and forced displacement from their lands. Photo: CRS staff

TAKE ACTION NOW!

Visit the CRS Action Center – <http://actioncenter.crs.org> – and send a message to President Obama today asking him to support a new U.S. policy in Colombia by:

- Actively promoting human rights and a negotiated end to the conflict.
- Prioritizing social and humanitarian funding, particularly for internally displaced persons & refugees.
- Supporting national efforts by the victims of the conflict to seek 'truth, justice and reparations.'
- Phasing out aerial fumigation and increasing effective development funding.
- Forging trade and aid relationships that protect and create opportunities for small farmers, the rural poor and endangered workers.

Join the CRS Advocacy Network at <http://actioncenter.crs.org/signup> for information about how you can advocate for international justice and peace issues year-round.